

Duxbury Clipper, Wednesday, May 22, 1898

27

(The following story about the storm of '98 appeared in the Nov. 27, 1898 issue of the Duxbury Press:)

The Storm of '98

Notes of the Storm.

Duxbury got it in the "neck".

The beach is badly injured - everything movable on it washed away, and great breaches made through the beach itself.

The Powder Point Bridge still stands, but the abutments have been carried away. Foot passengers have ventured across it, but it isn't safe for carriage travel.

The shore is strewn with wreckage of buildings and furniture. All the summer cottages, on the beach and close to the shore on the mainland, suffered badly. Some were entirely demolished, and their contents scattered broadcast.

At the house of Cassius Hunt, in the village, the family was obliged to vacate, the water rising until it stood 2 feet deep on the ground floor.

The lumber yard of John Irwin had a severe shaking up, and much lumber was lost.

Trees had to take it. Many a huge old-timer bowed before the fury of the gale. Some were torn up by the roots; others were canted over. Branches are as thick as "leaves in Vallombrosa."

The Gurnet is now an island.

Alfred Green's dike was demolished.

The railroad was thoroughly demoralized. All communication with Boston is now by the way of Kingston. Trains run to connect with trains on the main line.

The damage to Duxbury is estimated at $100,000.

It may be that our Duxbury correspondent was lost in the blizzard. We have heard nothing from him.

Not Lost

The Duxbury correspondent was not lost in the blizzard and any delinquency on his part in not filing his column in the Press must be laid to our impaired roads and mail service of last week. At that time we sent an account of the damage wrought by the storm in Duxbury, but probably it did not reach the Plymouth office in time. Every day brings forth further detail of the storm havoc. The roads in West Duxbury passing through Tinkertown, Turklin, Fordville, and High Street, present a curious sight. Trees are down in all directions. Much valuable woodland had been badly damaged and the wood choppers will be kept busy all winter.

(More on the storm from the Press.)

The storm of last Sunday was felt all over Duxbury and especially so on the shore. The damage to individual parties was in no case very large unless in the case of Sanford Winsor whose boat house was demolished and who, it is reported, owned heavily in the schooner Juanita which was wrecked at Cohasset Beach. J. A. Irwin, whose pecuniary loss will probably not exceed $300, was greatly inconvenienced by the distribution of his lumber on other people's property.

Dike Breaks

The much discussed Mattakesett Court over which the County Commissioners and Irwin have been in controversy was opened up at one end by the tide breaking through the dyke and closed at the other by a falling tree. The water breaking through the dyke at this point caused a heavy overflow of the sea towards Washington St. completely covering the street in places. The cellar of W. S. Freeman's store was filled with water to within a few inches of the floor. The lumber from Irwin's wharf and boxes beating against the building rendered it unsafe and Arthur Arnold with much difficulty removed his family to a place of safety. Mrs. Arnold, overcome by the storm and exertions, fainting on the way. A large shed on Irwin's wharf was moved about 8 feet.

At King's Hotel the roof of the barn was blown off and great patches of shingles torn off the main building. Ichabod Sampson lost a large section of fence and his house was injured to some extent. He places his loss at about $60. The Augustus Sampson house was also slightly injured on the roof.

Brigg's Stable was the scene of much excitement Sunday morning, the tide fairly forcing him to make a hasty exit. The water rose so rapidly that he had to swim his horses to dry land. Briggs led 2 horses up to King's Hotel, intending to stable them there, but just as he arrived the roof blew off knocking one of the horses down. One of Briggs' pigs was rescued in true western style by Joseph Nepton, who by means of a lasso, brought the downing grunter to shore. The cow could not be induced to leave but stood in the barn calmly awaiting events that never came as when the tide went out the stable stood as sound as ever.

The sidewalk from the cable office to Blue River Bridge was washed away. The row of bath houses at "Old Cove" was left all out of shape, some tipped over, some not around, and some broke in 2. Three large trees in William Hancock's yard were blown over and a section of Lot Soule's fence was floated up to the flag staff in front of the Cable office.

At Powder Point many large trees were felled and Mr. Knapp's windmill demolished. At Point End, a portion of the roof of Reuben Peterson's house was blown off and the Davenport house partially injured. The Gurnet Bridge stood the shock but the earth around the abutments was gullied out at each end. The beach at several places from Cut Island to the Gurnet is washed away and foot travel along the beach is impossible except at low tide as the sand hills are at these points entirely gone. Nearly all of the gunning stands have been washed away.

The old "Pogy House" at the point was destroyed.

At Duxbury village many large trees were blown down. Richards' boat house with 3 boats in it was washed down the bay but was eventually recovered. Sanford Winsor's yacht "Scamper" was sunk in the bay but was recovered.

J. M. Cushing's bath houses were destroyed. Riche's wharf and bath houses are gone. James Winsor's boat house and wharf were badly mixed up. Clarence Taylor's barn was blown over. W. J. Alden Jr. lost his windmill as did many others throughout the town.

At South Duxbury the bridge on Marshall St. was carried away. The wharf at the Standish house was destroyed, the top of Myles' Standish spring was blown off, and the bottling establishment was nearly wrecked.

The barn at Mrs. Ann Winsor's was blown down, boat houses around Harden's Hill were destroyed. Cal Smith's house was wholly destroyed and Seaver's wharf was washed away.

L. B. Sherman of Duxbury with a Mr. Worthen of Boston and Halsey Blake had a narrow escape at Sherman's gunning stand at the beach, and it was only by the most strenuous efforts and by deep wading that they were able to reach High Pines and safety. Paul Gifford and a friend also had to fight for their lives.

Will and Richard Connor, 2 brothers, with a man whose name is not known, were also taken unawares at their stand near the Plum Hills. They were obliged to leave their shanty and took to safety on a high bank. Here they stayed for 3 hours in the cold and storm clinging to a tree while every moment their ground grew smaller as the tide washed the sand away. At last the tide lowered and the chilled trio started for the Gurnet where they found warmth. Al Freeman's stand on the Standish Shore and Glover's stand as well as many others were carried away by the storm. It is estimated that it will cost the town at least one thousand dollars for repairs on the highway.